

BEFORE—Class of 30 is large order for teacher. Maude Foster teaches unwieldy class of about 30 before staggered system was instituted.

AFTER—With staggered session, Mrs. Foster takes more time to work with each pupil, answer questions, and give special help. Teachers contend the method may be longer, but it's easier.

Teachers Stagger Classes for Individual Attention

Some elementary-school teachers have volunteered for a longer day because it makes their work easier.

Staggered sessions at several schools allow primary teachers to work with small groups two hours a day, emphasizing individual work.

In most cases, staggered classes are set up so about half the students arrive at 9 and work an hour before the remainder arrives at 10. At 2:10, the early students depart, leaving the others another hour.

The plan gives teachers more time to work with individuals, particularly in reading and arithmetic.

The program has proved most effective in first, second and third grades where students are getting foundation work.

PUPILS LEARN RIGHT, WRONG SAFETY WAYS

The right and wrong ways to be safe were presented to students at Newton Elementary School, last week by Robert Ramsdell's seventh and eighth-grade class.

As a result of their studies, the youngsters demonstrate safe ways of getting on buses, riding bikes, and walking, contrasting them with methods likely to lead to accidents.

City to Gain Tax Refunds in State Cut-Rate Census

Mayor Isen Tuesday night reported to the City Council that increased state tax money can be available for Torrance next year if the city proceeds with a state-operated census before April 1.

The Mayor absorbed new data on the state nose-count while attending the League of California Cities convention in San Francisco.

Under a new statute, the state conducts special censuses at a greatly reduced rate, thus permitting cities with newly expanded populations to share more abundantly in in-lieu and gas tax refunds.

Isen explained that if the deal with the state is put off till after April 1, it would be ineffectual. City Manager George Stevens, who also attended the San Francisco parley, said he already has discussed the census with state officials and that the count can be taken in March at a likely price of $1500.
